Prof CHARLES MACKWORTH-YOUNG
MA, MD, FRCP

Master August 2017-August 2018

Charles Mackworth-Young is a Consultant Physician specializing in Rheumatology. He read Medicine at Cambridge, followed by Archaeology and Anthropology. After attending St. Bartholomew's Medical College (Barts) he held several junior doctor positions at centres in and around London, including the Royal Postgraduate Medical School. He spent two years training in laboratory research at Tufts University New England Medical Center, USA, and continued this on his return.

Since 1990 he has been Consultant Physician at Charing Cross Hospital and Honorary Senior Lecturer at Imperial College. His research has focused on the origins of autoimmune diseases and the treatment of arthritis. He has also had particular interests in medical education and in ethics. In addition to his NHS and university work he is Medical Director at King Edward VII's Hospital, a charity that includes a focus on the care of veterans.

Charles is married to Iona, formerly an art historian, and they have three grown up children. He has been a ski instructor and rider, and claims to have been educated by Radio 3. He plays the trombone in an orchestra and disturbs the neighbours with his piano.
