

THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF TIN PLATE WORKERS ALIAS WIRE WORKERS

A P R (Tony) Steintal

Master 2016 / 17

Tony Steintal was installed as Master of the Worshipful Company of Tin Plate Workers alias Wire Workers at the Mansion House on 5th July 2016, the third generation of his family to occupy the post.

The son and grandson of stockbrokers, he was born and brought up in south-west London. Educated at Harrow School and St Cuthbert's Society Durham University, where he read philosophy and politics, he went on to become a chartered accountant.

He has spent most of his career advising businesses and individuals on cross-border taxation. He has dealt with buying and selling companies in the developed world, Africa and the Far East, advising corporate groups how they should structure their affairs and helping individuals manage the income from and planning for their estates – all so as his clients have reasonable certainty over their exposure to taxation, which has been made rather less predictable by the recent public criticism on aggressive tax planning by corporations and individuals.

Tony also has an interest in charities at both a professional and personal level. Whether it be advising charities, schools and academies on their exposure to taxation, serving as governor, trustee or treasurer or assessing governance and back office systems, Tony has been a willing participant.

In the City, Tony served as Master of the Worshipful Company of Curriers in 2005-06 and remains one of that Company's Court Assistants.

Tony is married to Jan and they have two daughters; Nathalie is concluding her research into stromal cells for her PhD whilst Julia is a civil servant. Nathalie and Julia are sharing duties as Tony's Consort during his year as Master.

Tony's other interests include membership of the Hurlingham Club, croquet, gardening, skiing, travel, food and wine.
